The Teaching portal: How to use resources in and out of the classroom

Dr Eilish Gregory

The Aims of the RHS Teaching Portal:

- To showcase the different teaching and research resources that are available in the public domain and which can be incorporated into the classroom.
- To be a platform where teachers, students, researchers and interested members of the public can discover history resources on a diverse range of history topics.
- To learn about the various historical societies and organisations which encourage historical research and public engagement.

Queen Victoria's Journals

Queen Victoria's Journals website reproduces coloured digitised images of all the surviving journals of Queen Victoria, from her first volume written as Princess of Kent in 1832, until her death in 1901. All pages in the journals have been transcribed and are fully searchable in its online database. Additionally, visitors to the website can also view illustrations and sketches drawn by Queen Victoria and read essays about her reign.

TAGGED BRITISH EMPIRE, DATABASE, DIARIES, DRAWINGS, JOURNALS, NINETEENTH CENTURY, QUEEN VICTORIA, ROYAL FAMILY, SKETCHES, TIMELINE, VICTORIAN BRITAIN, WOMEN, WRITING

Researchers will be provided with the URL link to the history resource website. All the resources are 'tagged' which makes them keyword searchable by period, discipline, interest and theme. Tags will make it easier narrow to searches for resources which have teaching material available and for different school levels.

Stuarts Online is a rich resource, bringing cutting-edge scholarship on the Stuart era to a wider audience. By focusing on key moments, documents and artefacts, Stuarts Online

We found – especially in earlier research, on The Stuart Successions Project – that moments of succession brilliantly illuminate the key issues and conflicts of this

To conclude:

- The Portal will be a useful online hub and tool for both students and teachers to access different history resources.
- The online databases will be fully searchable on the database.
- We welcome suggestions and feedback that you have about the Portal before its formal launch in November 2020.
- Teaching Portal 'How to Contribute' category to share teaching methods and resources.
